

the government and its institutions, suffer from administrative failure, defects in the mechanism of implementing decisions, and corruption laying root to new divisions. All of which are constraints to patriotic action and the advancement of our nation towards progress and prosperity. It can also create real crises in the future if not addressed today. Due to my great desire to convey this idea of a “crisis of thought” to the reader, I wrote an article entitled “The Saidi.” At the time, I did not publish the article because I didn’t want it to be misinterpreted. I will publish it in this chapter, however, and I hope the reader may fetch some wisdom out of it.
