

On the sidelines of the Forum, I was also able to meet for the first time the Minister of Justice Dr. Yacoub Al Sanea who has always been called the young minister. I can only express my admiration for the minister, and not for any self-interest because I always go by the book and take my right by the law so I do not need anyone. But as a citizen who doesn't care much about politics, I was surprised to find the person who took over the Ministry of Justice is an independent figure who doesn't follow the stream of political ideologies. It takes me back to the sixties and seventies. Just for the record, I will share my experience with His Excellency the Minister. Upon receiving this title, he inherited an enormous file of problems and mutual accusations concerning the management of my father's charity money, may God have mercy on him. So what did the minister do differently than what his predecessors did? He formed a fact-finding committee headed by an adviser from the Court of Appeals as well as three members of the judiciary. The Committee said its word, and the Minister gave his ruling based on the facts. As a result, he has repaired what time has damaged and restored what is right. This was because the professional administrative mechanism he employed was not based on the principle of "this is our son and this is our tribe." Rather, he listened to all the parties instead of only one and he made his declaration professionally and with absolute justice without favoring a party over another. This was my personal experience with a moderate minister whom I never met in my life before the ceremony.

And from the bottom of my heart, I hope I always see ministers such as him in this country!
