

homeland. Before the invasion of Kuwait, we were living in negligence, unable to interpret the political and military facts surrounding us. Overnight, we became homeless, and now we are living again in political and social negligence. Our wise government and distinguished parliament members, if you don't wake up from this negligence then our homeland may be lost again and no one will provide a roof over our heads. And I say to each mother who neglects raising her children and leaves them in the hands of maids, the years will pass and you will not be pleased with the outcome. The running of time does not go backwards, and the druggist cannot fix what was ruined by time. The most dangerous type of negligence is of those who fast and pray, but God has blocked their hearts from true faith due to their deeds against their brothers. You will find one of them harming his brother with false accusations, another one takes people's money illegitimately, while the other one bears false testimony before a judge. Therefore, in this Holy Month of Ramadan, I ask God to cast off the negligence which blinds us and our loved ones, and those who have harmed us and harmed themselves. May God accept our fasting and night prayers and may He accept yours as well.

To the people of Kuwait I say, may you witness another Ramadan.
