

Honestly speaking, sometimes I was fed up with some of his decisions, but the days proved to me the soundness of his point of view and saved me and my father's charity money a lot of problems. We are executing a will that has its own specificity, sanctity, and cautions. And because we are managing money from this inviolable will, and it's better to be safe than sorry.

And today, Mr. Bu-Safi has decided to dismount his horse and retire, and that is absolutely his right. How I wish that Kuwait TV and the National Council for Culture, Arts and Letters would take up the responsibility of recording the life and experiences of Kuwait's great men and women. Their memory is a part of the history of Kuwait that must be preserved. I am still holding the Kuwaiti families bearing a legacy accountable for documenting the life's journey of their men to preserve their heritage for the next generations. Each of these men has an experience worthy of remembering, and I say that honoring them for their lives is a duty for our society as well as a government. Days go by quickly, we age, and remembrance is a duty.

Mr. Bu-Safi, thank you very much for every piece of advice you offered me personally and the guidance you gave to my father's charity money. Also, thank you for following up and reading my articles. Whenever I hear a comment from you, I smile and say, you are among the few who have the ability to read between the lines. May God lengthen your life and keep you well and healthy.
