

Chapter Four: My Library

Books will be your greatest companion. This is true for me, especially while I'm travelling; keeping myself away from the daily burdens and responsibilities that will suffocate time until there isn't any left for this dear companion. I travel with these friends to open a window on the past, and unexpectedly it makes me explore the present and future. Like many readers, once I close the door on the last page, I find myself reaching for my pen, eager to share my impressions with the readers of my articles. This is the smallest chapter from my selection of articles as the daily issues which our country faces constantly impose themselves on me as a writer. From time to time, however, I try to engage the reader with some wisdom I received from my reading.