

After the ceremony, I couldn't find my nephew Abdullah at any of the tables. He had left the guests to eat along with the participants. When I found him, he told me that one of the competitors, Tariq Abu Ahmed, had liked his speech and that he was a self-help coach. They talked about Tariq's YouTube channel, Be Successful, and how he would like to collaborate with my nephew. Tariq Abu Ahmed is confined to a wheelchair and has difficulty with his speech, but that doesn't stop him from enriching the lives of others!

A cripple is a teacher to the healthy, praise God! We went there to teach, and yet we were taught! From that moment we decided to focus this year's Al Othman award in Kuwait towards people with special needs, and another award under the name Juz Amma—the thirtieth and last part of the Quran, which would be open to children. I wished people of Kuwait would attend such charitable gatherings, giving thanks to God for His blessings of health, grace, and security.
