

does it depend on their mood? The answer is that neither one nor the other is right or wrong, because the construction laws are dead. As the Egyptian proverb says: "He left the donkey and brought the saddle!"

In 2004, a window was opened to allow an increased construction rate, and in return specific fees must be paid to the state for the towers inside the city. And after some people approached this window, it got closed. The procedure was not bad, on the contrary, it resulted in beautiful towers, a wonderful city and the state's treasury was benefited. But why did this opportunity disappear? Why can't it be offered again, with the additional construction rates in return of fees and conditions for parking, storefronts and services with the same value? One of the malls in Kuwait is hardly compliant with any of the building codes, yet it was successfully licensed due to special permission from higher up. The result is a beautiful Kuwaiti landmark. Now, isn't that better than car repair shops that pollute the environment and occupy some of the most desirable areas in Kuwait?

Engineer Jinan, members of the National Assembly and the municipality, my brothers working in the municipality, all of you are competent and love this country, you have to bring this law to an end and legislate another one that can bring back this country's glamor.
